

New Bioresources Engineering Master's Program at University of Delaware

The Bioresources Engineering Department at the University of Delaware is excited to announce its new Master's degree program! Applications for Fall 2008 admission are currently being accepted.

See program web site for details:

<http://ag.udel.edu/breg/grad/gradprogram.htm>

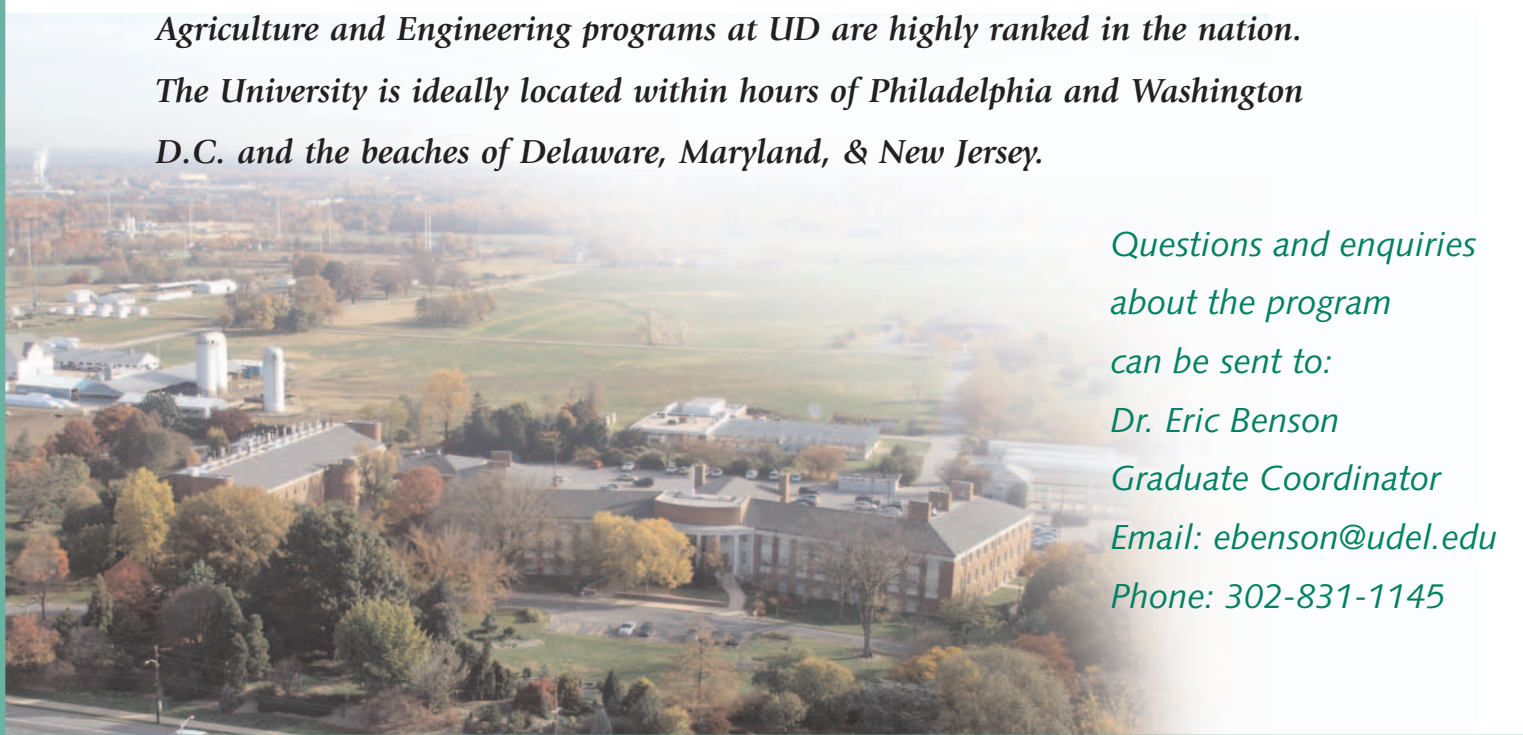

Potential research topics include nonpoint pollution, watershed management, land application of wastewater, ecological engineering, specialty crop mechanization, emergency management of poultry, poultry house environmental management and sensor technology. Graduate

Assistantships are available. Applicants are also encouraged to contact department faculty for additional research & funding opportunities.

Applicants can apply online at:
<http://www.udel.edu/gradoffice/applicants/>

Agriculture and Engineering programs at UD are highly ranked in the nation. The University is ideally located within hours of Philadelphia and Washington D.C. and the beaches of Delaware, Maryland, & New Jersey.

*Questions and enquiries about the program can be sent to:
Dr. Eric Benson
Graduate Coordinator
Email: ebenson@udel.edu
Phone: 302-831-1145*