

Delaware Fresh Produce Food Safety Training for Wholesale Vegetable and Fruit Producers

Voluntary Certification Training on Good Agricultural Practices, Good Handling Practices, Produce Food Safety Plans, and Third Party Audits for Wholesale Produce Growers, Packers, or Shippers in Delaware.

Recent food safety concerns emphasize the need for fresh produce growers to reduce potential exposure of fruits and vegetables to organisms that cause food-borne illness as well as other contaminants. Keeping produce safe should be a priority for Delaware produce growers, packers, and shippers. Good agricultural practices (GAPs) and good handling practices (GHPs) for vegetable and fruit production and packing are important to ensuring safe products. One of the recommendations of produce grower groups such as the National Watermelon Association is that all produce growers attend a GAP produce food safety class.

The University of Delaware Cooperative Extension Service in cooperation with the Delaware Department of Agriculture and the Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association of Delaware is offering a voluntary certification program that will provide the training necessary for wholesale produce growers, packers, or shippers in Delaware to understand and implement GAPs/GHP's in their operations; develop produce food safety plans; and prepare for a third party audit if buyers require one. This will be a 2-part training with 3 hours of classroom education and 3 hours of on-farm practical instruction. We advise that at least one person from an operation attend both sessions and become certified. The Delaware Department of Agriculture will be issuing the certificate. Consultants and agency or university personnel that work with wholesale produce growers are also encouraged to attend.
